Universidad Católica Nordestana

UCNE

A novel machine learning approach for estimation of electricity demand: An empirical evidence from Thailand.

Autores: Mostafavi, Elham Sadat[1,2] elh.mostafavi@gmail.com
Mostafavi, Seyyed Iman[3]
Jaafari, Arefeh[4]
Hosseinpour, Fariba[3]

Tipo de documento: Article

Descriptores: *MACHINE learning
*ESTIMATION theory
*ELECTRIC power consumption
*ENERGY conversion
*ENERGY management

Términos geográficos: THAILAND

Palabras clave proporcionadas por el autor: Electricity demand
Genetic programming
Hybrid method
Prediction
Simulated annealing

NAICS/Códigos del sector: 561210 Facilities Support Services
561790 Other Services to Buildings and Dwellings
531312 Nonresidential Property Managers

Resumen: Highlights: [•] A hybrid approach is presented for the estimation of the electricity demand. [•] The proposed method integrates the capabilities of GP and SA. [•] The GSA model makes accurate predictions of the electricity demand. [ABSTRACT FROM AUTHOR]

Afiliaciones del autor: [1]Department of Industrial Engineering, Isfahan University of Technology, Isfahan, Iran
[2]College of Engineering, Montana State University, Bozeman, MT, USA

[3]Faculty of Economic and Accounting, Islamic Azad University, Central Tehran Branch (IAUCTB), Tehran, Iran

[4]Faculty of Technology and Engineering, Islamic Azad University, Central Tehran Branch (IAUCTB), Tehran, Iran